Abstract

Throughout its forty year history (and still going strong), the Ohio Council of Criminal Justice Education (OCCJE) has remained steady in some respects and in others, has evolved. Currenlty, it is one of nine statewide criminal justice education-focused organizations in the United States. The purpose of this article is to describe the influential activities and context OCCJE has undertaken over the years as well as to highlight the critical institutions and individuals who have paved the way for OCCJE's undertakings. At least one of the goals in doing so is to pass on at least a portion of OCCJE's insightful legacy on to the reader. The quantitative and qualitative data gleaned for this case study are from a content analysis of OCCJE's historical records (i.e. meeting minutes, conference proceedings, and committee correspondence), surveys conducted with seminal OCCJE members, and for an outsider perspective, content analysis from websites of other criminal justice education-focused organizations. OCCJE's mission has remained constant over its history and is most notably evident by its annual career fairs and research conferences. No longer "just" for professors, OCCJE membership now includes criminal justice-interested practitioners (nonacademics) and students as well. Future OCCJE efforts involve effectively addressing the diversity of needs and resources apparent in the increased number (over 150) of criminal justice programs throughout the Ohio area.

Acknowledgements

Some of the materials used in the analysis of this paper were provided by former and present members of OCCJE who kept the rich data necessary for this article. Much appreciation is owed to Istvan (Steve) Domonkos because he shared many of his OCCJE artifacts which were from the beginning of OCCJE. Please note that a longer version of this paper was created in 2011 for the 40th anniversary of the official founding of the Council (originally called the Council of Higher Education in Criminal Justice). Portions of this monograph detailing OCCJE's history are available at OCCJE's website (http://www.occje.org). Copies of the complete monograph are available by contacting the first author (jmhazy@ysu.edu).

Introduction

The Ohio Council of Criminal Justice Education (OCCJE or in this article, "the Council") is a non-profit organization made up of institutional and individual members who are concerned about and involved in criminal justice educational programs in Ohio and its bordering states. The organization officially was founded on May 12, 1971 as the Ohio Council of Higher Education in Criminal Justice (OCHECJ). Thirteen Ohio colleges and universities that offered academic programs in criminal justice made up the initial membership (see list below). In 1982, a revised Constitution changed the name to the Ohio Council of Criminal Justice Education (for a look at the earliest logo as compared to OCCJE's current logo, see Figure 1 and for an overall timeline of OCCJE from 1971 through 2011 see Table 1). The Council maintains its non-profit status in Ohio today. OCCJE serves to bring together criminal justice educators and practitioners to facilitate cooperation and to promote the expansion of professional criminal justice education, its subsequent application to the field, and to engage actively in the professionalization of the criminal justice field.

In the full 105 page monograph detailing OCCJE's history, the justification and aim of sharing the Council's past is articulated as follows (Conser, Ponstingle, Hazy, and Kilmer, 2012, p.iv):

"Successful organizations evolve over time; focus and objectives change as past goals are accomplished or environmental conditions force re-evaluation of current operations. Volunteer organizations reflect their history and the desires of current membership. Over time, those desires also change. Unfortunately, newer members of organizations often do not know or fully understand from where the organization came. The accomplishments and struggles of their predecessors are often unknown or hazy at best. This monograph attempts to begin to fill that vacuum for the Council and honor those individuals who contributed to its founding, growth, evolution, and continuance over the last forty years."

So too, it is hoped that OCCJE's struggles and successes described in this article begin to provide insight in order to inform the next generation of professionals interested in criminal justice education.

Mission/Goals/Objectives

Taken directly from OCCJE's website (OCCJE, 2012), the mission and goals of the Council are: "The mission of OCCJE is to promote education and research in the administration of criminal justice and to facilitate communication and cooperation with practitioners on the matters of mutual interest concerning education in criminal justice. By providing opportunities that bring criminal justice educators and practitioners together, the sponsored activities of OCCJE facilitate dialogue, promote the expansion of professional criminal justice education, and elevate the ethical and personnel standards of the criminal justice field. In carrying out the mission, OCCJE addresses the following seven (7) objectives:

- 1. Provide OCCJE institutions and individual members with the means for continuous exchange of information, experiences, and judgments concerning all aspects of criminal justice education;
- 2. Stimulate and facilitate research, experimentation, and evaluation in criminal justice and related problems of learning and teaching (in doing so, serve as a clearinghouse of information and reports on these matters and to publicize the - findings of studies that have significance for the improvement of criminal justice);

- 3. Exchange reports, experiences, and ideas with educators and practitioners in criminal justice both locally and elsewhere as a means of improving education in criminal justice;
- 4. Encourage and assist the administrators of participating institutions and agencies to develop greater competence, especially in their leadership of educators in improved criminal justice programs;
- Collaborate with other organizations and agencies in activities designed to establish desirable directions, goals and standards for criminal justice education;
- Make available to educational institutions and agencies upon request professional consultant services and other practical assistance to help them develop or improve criminal justice education; and
- 7. Represent criminal justice educational programs before all segments of the public."

OCCJE Organizational Structure

An Executive Committee of roughly ten individuals guides the Council. It is made up of officers elected to one year terms. The positions in the Executive Committee include: President, First Vice-President, Second Vice-President, Board of Trustees, Secretary-Treasurer, and Assistant to the President. Table 2 displays the names of the individuals who have served on the Executive Committee since its inception in 1971. Only five individuals have served as President more than one term and none of them for more than two terms, non-consecutively.

Environmental Issues

As to be expected with volunteer organizations, some of the Council's objectives receive more attention than others. The Executive Committee members balance their daily obligations to their institutions with the demands of the Council. OCCJE today exists in an environment different from that of the 1970s and 1980s. The United States had experienced the tumultuous 1960s with significant social strain brought on by the civil rights movement, riots and confrontations with police, political assassinations, campus tensions, and the Vietnam conflict (Bennett and Marshall, 1979). Social principles and criminal justice institutions were being scrutinized and the President's Commission on Law Enforcement and Administration of Justice found numerous deficiencies in the criminal justice system and published many recommendations for improvement (Adams, 1976; Loewenthal, 1980; Stephens, 1976). Part of the government's response to the President's Commission was to stimulate and fund educational programs to improve the caliber of personnel pursuing careers in the criminal justice system (Myren, 1979). Overall, the challenges during the 1970s and 1980s were addressed by dedicated professionals who were determined to bring acceptance and recognition to an emerging new academic discipline – criminal justice sciences (note that there are other curriculum titles under which it was delivered including but not limited to police science, law enforcement administration, corrections, correctional administration, justice studies, criminal justice, or the administration of justice). The founders of the Council believed that an organization of state programs would bring strength and coordination.

OCCJE's Inception

Prior to its official kickoff on May 12, 1971, preparatory work was done starting as early as 1970 by a core set of individuals representing less than ten colleges and universities who had academic programs in criminal justice. During the 1970s, OCCJE membership was limited to institutional membership for purposes of voting; it was not until March of 1978 that individual membership was approved in addition to institutional membership. The decade was very dynamic for the criminal justice community; there were considerable debates and competition for federal and state resources. This often strained relationships between practitioners and academicians and was not uncommon in the criminal justice field as a whole (Myren, 1979). Emotions and passions ran high and the differences among professional associations, institutions, and individuals created considerable legitimacy issues within colleges and universities regarding the mission and focus of their programs. However, throughout all of this, the Council continued to grow and to confront the issues. It became a forum to share thoughts, ideas, and concerns. Younger members were mentored by seasoned academicians. Membership fluctuated with some institutions and individuals participating for a short time, while others stayed and helped the organization to persevere.

The environmental context of the founding and initial growth of the Council is not well documented by the official minutes and documents. The enactment of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 fostered a tremendous growth of law enforcement and criminal justice related educational programs throughout the United States. The sixty or so programs that existed prior to the Act mushroomed to over a thousand during the 1970s. Considerable debate, competition for federal and state resources, and strained relationships between practitioners and academicians occurred during this decade. Emotions and passions ran high and the differences among professional associations, institutions, and individuals created considerable legitimacy issues within colleges and universities regarding the mission and focus of their programs. Generally speaking, there were three distinctive approaches found in higher education: the vocational/technical programs, the liberal arts/research programs, and the professional programs. It is not our purpose here to detail the history of criminal justice education in the US; however, these issues (articulation between associate and baccalaureate programs, resource allocations, the quest to improve the CJ System, etc.) and philosophical differences affected the internal relationships with the Council. Meetings often became very passionate and differences often became engrained in positions taken by members. However, throughout all of this, the Council continued to grow and to confront the issues. It became a forum to share thoughts, ideas, and concerns. Younger members were mentored by seasoned academicians. Not everyone was happy with the results of positions taken, and some institutions and individuals participated for a short time, while others stayed and helped the organization to persevere. The historical record contained in official minutes and some correspondence seldom gives transparency to the behind-the-scenes issues and debates that flourished during this decade.

Trying Times in the 1980s

The 1980s were very challenging years for the Council. LEEP funding was no longer a primary focus for the institutions in Ohio. A downturn in the national and state economies contributed to an unstable environment in academia (Felkenes, 1985). Liaison efforts with Ohio Criminal Justice Services and the Ohio Peace Officer Training Council & Academy were moderately successful. Outreach efforts to various correctional agencies and legislators along with visitations to prisons, the conducting of mini-workshops on child abuse and private security, and greater visibility in national and regional criminal justice organizations helped the Council to remain viable and meaningful to its membership. At the national and state levels, the field of criminal justice was still seeking greater acceptance as a discipline, and the credentials of faculty members remained a topic of debate (Felkenes, 1980). Articulation between associate degree and baccalaureate degree programs improved but some issues (such as college credit for training and agency experience) remained controversial. During this decade, a number of "firsts" were achieved and are listed in Table 1: 1)the renaming of the organization and other major Constitutional changes such as opening membership, 2) the publication of a regular newsletter, 3) the initiation of faculty and student awards, 4) the initiation of the annual career/job fair, 5) sponsorship of mini-workshops across the state, 6) the first Council meeting held out-of-state at Eastern Kentucky University, 7) scholarly presentations by our own members and guests, and 8) involvement in ACJS Meetings and Regional Association meetings. All of these efforts were significant developments in the history and viability of the organization. Relative to the new practice of honoring students and other deserving individuals on an annual basis, Table 3 lists the names of all the award winners.

Breakthroughs in the 1990s

During the 1990s, the focus of efforts centered on sponsoring one-day conferences or seminars throughout Ohio, but primarily in the central region to increase attendance. Topics of these conference included: Minorities in Criminal Justice, Child Molestation: An Emphasis on Occult and Satanism, Klanwatch Program of the Southern Poverty Law Center, Psychiatry and Violent Offenders, Violence in the Schools, Robert Ressler on Serial and Sexual Killers, Ohio Firearms Legislation, Klanwatch and the Militia Task Force of the Southern Poverty Law Center, Ohio Correctional Issues, and Cyberspace Crime. The 90s also witnessed the Council's debate on issues related to the proposals of ACJS Accreditation and minimum standards for Criminal Justice Programs ("Minimum Standards for Criminalogy and Criminal Justice Education initially adopted by the Northeastern Association of Criminal Justice Sciences) and Tech-Prep programs in Ohio. Also during this time period, the Council moved to two general meetings during the academic year, a fall and spring meeting, with the Executive Committee meeting as needed. The OCCJE 1997-98 Membership Directory listed 52 names.

Throughout the 1990s, the Council successfully held many quality seminars in or around the Columbus area. We had presenters with name recognition on the state and national levels. The Council continued to hold annual job/career fairs around the state attracting hundreds of students each time. The fiscal condition of the Council went from about $3,400 in the fall of 1990 to over $12,500 by the end of the 1999-2000 academic year. The dedicated members of the Executive Committee were quite busy planning the seminars and job fairs. It was during this decade that the Council decided to hold only two general membership meetings each year instead of three. The unpredictable winter weather created uncertainty and added risk to holding meetings that would incur major expense, so the fall – spring meeting agenda took root. Originally, the job fairs would be held in the spring, but it was determined that the fall would be better for both agencies and students in terms of applying for any open positions and for recruiting students who would be graduating in May or June. That change occurred in 1999 and continues through the present. The decade of the 1990s was probably the most productive in the Council's outreach to other state agencies and criminal justice practitioners in terms of involving them in presentations at seminars and attracting professionals to attend the seminars and workshops. With the advent of the World Wide Web, and email, the Council was challenged to develop a presence on the Web and to improve its own internal communications mechanisms. As the Council moved into the next decade, these newer technologies would create other challenges (i.e. web content, member only access and maintenance; virtual meetings, needed facilities and equipment for presentations, ) and opportunities.

Most Recent OCCJE Happenings

During the 2000s, the Council's activities continued the two meeting format with the fall meeting being the job/career fair and the spring seminar or research conference focusing on academic presentations similar to the format used by regional and national associations. This decade is noted for being more student-centered for institutional members. There was less outreach to practitioners and policy-makers during the last half of the decade when the spring seminar transitioned into the education-research conferences. The Council also added two student seats to the Executive Committee. The financial assets of the Council fluctuated very little during this decade which began and ended with about $12,500. The treasury did climb to around $15,900 during 2001, but gradually fell when costs exceed revenue for a couple of seminars and when a paid administrative assistant was utilized. Since 2003, the Research Conferences have been less risky and generally speaking, the dues and other revenues have offset the costs and award expenses associated with Council activities. The decade brought other challenges such as improving a presence on the web for the Council, initiating an online journal, and maintaining/enlarging the membership base. There were improvements in the operations of the Council to be sure. Electronic communications, recruiter/job fair mailing lists, creation of a website to facilitate conference registrations and resource material was achieved. The Council also moved into the social media arena.

Recollection Summary

The chronology of the Council's history indicates that an organization of criminal justice professors evolved over forty years to become one of professors, practitioners, and students. It describes the changing membership and focus over the decades; from academic programming concerns to a more faculty- and student-focused organization. It describes an organization that initially sought to influence state organizations in terms of their approval and funding of academic programs; then to one providing seminars and workshops with well-known speakers/presenters; to one that provides research presentation opportunities for faculty and students and career fairs for students.

Future Directions for OCCJE

Members of the Council's Executive Committee were asked to respond to questions relating to the role of OCCJE and their vision for the organization's future. There was overwhelming support for continuing along where the Council has always been. In terms of expressing new ideas, strategies, or directions for OCCJE, the items mentioned by those interviewed are grouped in three areas. Each of these areas is described below.

First, use technology (website and social media) to enhance the effectiveness of OCCJE to address the needs of its members, especially student members and to tap into the growing number of criminal justice academic programs in the area. Table 4 lists the 148 names of those colleges and universities in the Ohio area that have at least one criminal justice program at the associate, bachelors, or graduate level. It would be helpful to build on the existing database of these schools listed in Table 4 in terms of finding out and posting, at minimum, the specific criminal justice programs offered, the degrees awarded, and contact/faculty person(s).

Secondly, pursue alternative funding sources to enrich the activities in which the Council partakes. Potential sources may include grants and/or partnerships with practitioner groups. Many of the respondents mentioned the potential benefits of having a paid Executive Director position to help facilitate carrying out the Council's mission and objectives.

The third area has some overlap with the previous area described above and concerns the academic-practitioner struggles in criminal justice. A number of those questioned describe the need to (re-)establish relationships with practitioner groups across the state. The Office of Criminal Justice Services, Ohio Department of Rehabilitation and Corrections, and the various statewide law enforcement groups were targeted by those questioned.

Conclusion

Considering that OCCJE continues to sponsor an annual career fair, an annual research conference, issue awards, and publish an online journal, its accomplishments are remarkable. OCCJE leverages its access to current resources very well, however it is still heavily reliant on membership dues. The optimal situation for Council may be to increase its income to a point where a part-time or full-time executive director could be utilized to coordinate the Council's various activities. Thus, the future is promising for this organization given its productive past. Indeed, it may be beneficial for OCCJE to look at the other eight statewide organizations across the United States that serve as a resource for those interested in criminal justice academic programs. Table 5 lists these eight organizations and Table 6 lists the five regional organizations with a concerted interest in criminal justice education. All five of these regional organizations are affiliated with the Academy of Criminal Justice Sciences. There are a number of statewide organizations throughout the US that focus on corrections and most of these are affiliated with the American Correctional Association. Only one regional organization in the United States, Western Society of Criminology, is affiliated with the American Society of Criminology. A worthwhile endeavor for OCCJE is to look more closely at these other statewide and regional organizations for their best practices in addressing the same issues that face the Council.
